Enrollment up at Fairhaven

Student enrollment at Western's Fairhaven College has reached its highest point in more than three years. Fairhaven admissions officers encourage prospective students to apply as soon as possible because the school may limit fall quarter enrollment during the summer.

The unusually large spring enrollment (231 compared to 206 last spring) was Fairhaven's third consecutive quarter of growth. It marked the first time in the college's history that total student enrollment has increased from winter to spring.

The upsurge, reports Dean Phil Ager, is due to "the growing vitality of our classes, our integrated core curriculum and the willingness of Fairhaven faculty to work with students individually far beyond the normal teaching load."

In 1977-78 a University committee investigated Fairhaven College and made a number of recommendations to improve the program, including the appointment of Ager. According to Western's Vice President for Academic Affairs and Provost James L. Talbot, Fairhaven acted immediately on the recommendations, increased enrollment and renewed its strong, lively undergraduate program.

"While accomplishing this, Fairhaven also reduced its costs per student by over 65 percent, a most remarkable feat," Talbot said.

Western students took advantage of one of early summer's "few" sunny days to grace campus. Fisher Foundation on The Square proved to be an ideal spot to take in some sun and stay cool.

Researches outer space

Robbing the heights in outer space and atop Mt. Baker is keeping a chemistry professor from Western in touch with air pollution of the past and future.

Dr. H. William Wilson, now on professional leave from Western, is studying minute particles in space under a grant from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA). His other current research project requires even more stamina. Working through the Oregon Graduate Center at Beaverton, Ore., Wilson and other scientists are checking "historical contaminants are in glacial ice," said Wilson, who also did work linked to the recent successful flight of the Space Shuttle Columbia.

Wilson is no newcomer to upper-level research. During the summer of 1976, for example, he used the facilities of the National Center for Atmospheric Research at Boulder, Colo., to analyze gases and other materials miles above the earth. For NASA, Wilson is studying the occurrence of such natural pollutants as methane, ammonia, acetylene and other gases.

Closer to earth, Wilson is spending part of his leave from Western above the timberline of 10,778-foot Mt. Baker.

"In a sense, we're looking into the historical aspects of air pollution," he said. "By collecting and analyzing samples of glacier layers, we're able to identify trace materials that came from the atmosphere. Our findings could be important to cities such as Bellingham which depend upon melted snow and ice from mountains for their water supplies."

Eventually, Wilson added, he and other Western scientists hope to expand their studies through a program of funded research.

"To date, no one has been able to determine exactly what airborne contaminants are in glacial ice," Wilson said. "We think we've developed a program to answer

Wins award

Debbie Van Beek, a 1981 graduate of Ferndale High School, was selected by the Alumni Board as the winner of its 1981 tuition and fees scholarship when the board met in May. Van Beek is the daughter of Glenn '56, and Donna Van Beek.

The board was impressed with Van Beek's extra-ordinarily strong academic record, noting that she also had significant accomplishments as a community volunteer and as a very creative individual.

The Alumni Board Scholarship is presented each year to the dependent of a Western graduate. It is the only scholarship that is a direct gift from the Alumni Association, since most scholarship funds are administered through The Western Foundation and the Student Financial Aid Office.

BY STEVE INGE / Director of Alumni Relations

I enjoy buttons, bumperstickers and other devices for delivering pithy one-liners. Using few words in very limited space, they communicate efficiently. One favorite that frequently appears asserts, "If you think education is expensive, try ignorance." I happen to agree.

You will be seeing another slogan of this type in the near future, if you haven't seen it already. It says, "America's energy is Mindpower."

The slogan, and the national campaign to instill it into the American public's conscious, comes from the Council for Advancement and Support of Education (CASE), the professional association of alumni directors and editors, writers, fund-raisers and other folk who keep to you aware of, interested in and supportive of the place and people that provided you with part of your formal learning. The mindpower concept is so simple and clear that it is hard to re-state. America grew because people with different ideas were allowed to grow, to develop their ideas to fruition. One of the important places where the growth takes place is on our college and university campuses.

Several years ago I was talking with one of Western's distinguished alumni, Dr. Laurence Peter, author of The Peter Principle. He commented at one point that the birth of both his popular writing and serious research had been at Western. Allowed to grow, his initial observations on the ironies of administrative structures became the books that enriched the lives of his many readers.

It is tempting to seek a direct causal relationship between Western and Laurence Peter's work, but arguably hazardous to attempt. Western's contribution was an encouraging, accepting environment wherein the individual could create. The fact is, we need places where ideas can be uncorked, examined and discarded or used. Society's wish list is long. We want a cure for inflation, a cure for cancer, a source of clean, non-hazardous energy, control of the world population growth, and you can add your favorite to the list. What we must always keep in mind is that the prerequisite to the apparatus, substance or structure that will resolve our pet problem is the critical idea that makes it all work.

I want you to remember this when your Alumni Association comes calling to ask for support—be it for a project or money. When your membership renewal for the Alumni Club arrives, remember "America's energy is Mindpower. Make higher education your priority." ☐

Class of '31 graduates Claire Pierce and Margaret Eldred talked about the good times up on the hill.

Names Mike Kimmich to alumni presidency

At its spring meeting May 30 in Bellingham, the Western Alumni Association's presidency passed from Shirley Moore, '72, Olympia, to Mike Kimmich, '70, Bellingham.

Kimmich has served the past year in the president-elect position and has been the principal developmental force behind the association's division called "Alumni Enterprises." By selecting items for sale to alumni and parents, and by providing commencement services to Western, the association has developed additional resources with which to serve the University. Kimmich is the district manager for Southland Corporation (7-11) in the Bellingham area.

Elected to the president-elect position was Hunter Nickell of Longview, associate dean of students at Lower Columbia College. Nickell is a 1974 graduate.

Others serving on the executive committee include Joen Wilkins, '73, Auburn, as secretary-treasurer; Becky Walsh, '68, Marysville; Larry Moore, '72, Olympia; and Chuck LeWarne, '55, Edmonds, will serve in the three executive-at-large positions.

The board also elected to three-year terms Dr. Patricia Svenson of Portland, Mike Bates of Bellingham, Ron Renard of Everett, Liz Verdier of Bellingham and Don Daggett of Tacoma. Both Svenson and Daggett have served on earlier boards. ☐
Board ok's rate hikes at Western next year

Service and Activities fees paid by students of Western will be increased next fall as a result of action approved Thursday, June 4, by the University’s trustees.

For the 1981-82 academic year, the S&A fees will rise to $184.50 from the current $162, an increase of $17.69 or 11.04 percent. The increase includes a $4.61 (2.5 percent) loan charge that will be added to a pool of funds to be dis­persed by Western’s Financial Aid Office as low-interest loans to students.

The S&A fees, which are part of students’ annual tuition and fee charges, are used to support the University’s Housing and Dining system, activities of Western’s Associated Students and department­ally related activities such as intercollegiate athletics, club sports, student publications, forensics and other programs.

The new S&A fee schedule approved by trustees adds $1 per credit hour to the tuition and fees paid by 1981 Summer Session stu­dents. Full-time students (10 or more credit hours) pay total fees of $289 this summer while part-time students pay $29 per credit hour. Southeast Asia military veterans pay $153 as full-time students, or $15 per credit hour as part-time students.

Increases mandated by the 1981 State Legislature require Western to charge full-time resident stu­dents $867 for the academic year starting this fall, or $39 per credit hour for part-time students, and $942 or $31 per credit hour for the 1982-83 school year. Resident graduate students will pay $996, or $33 per credit hour this fall, with costs rising to $1,092, or $36 per credit hour in 1982-83.

Non-resident undergraduates at Western will pay $2,910 this fall, or $97 per credit hour, and $3,210, or $107 per credit hour starting fall 1982. Costs for full-time non­resident graduate students will be $3,435 this fall, or $115 per credit hour, and $3,646, or $127 per credit hour for 1982-83.

Qualified Southeast Asia military veterans will pay full-time enrollment costs of $458, or $15 per credit hour this fall, and those rates are scheduled to hold through the 1982-83 school year.

Communicators win 10

Student communicators at Western took 10 awards in seven categories to lead all colleges in the five-state Northwest regional “Mark of Excellence Awards” competition.

Sponsored by the Society of Professional Journalists, SDX, the awards, presented April 18 at Pullin­man, Wash., and Moscow, Idaho, cite entries from student newspapers, magazines, television shows and radio broadcasts.

Garnering nine awards in the regional contest was the University of Oregon, which bested Washing­ton State University with eight and Oregon State University with six.

Western won three first-place awards to tie with WSU just behind Oregon's four top wins. Gregg Olsen, a recent Western journalism graduate, took firsts for editing the twice-quarterly Klipsun magazine and for non-fiction magazine writing. John Phillips won a top award for a radio spot news entry. Other Western winners included Sue Mitchell, third place for spot news on The Western Front newspaper; Lynn Keebaugh, second place for newspaper feature writing; Lloyd Pritchett, honorable mention for depth newspaper reporting; Claudia North, honorable mention in the “best all-around magazine” category; Leila McIntosh, third place for non-fiction magazine writing; Kevin Olden and James deGrasse shared the second place award for TV documentary; and Debbie Ahl, Mike Bossick and George Robbins shared third place in the same category.

R. E. "Ted" Stannard Jr., chair­man of the Journalism Department, said Olsen’s and Phillips’ first-place entries will automatically qualify for this year’s national SDX competition. Twice in the last four years Klipsun has been named the nation’s top college magazine, he said.

Competing in the Region 10 "Mark of Excellence" event were colleges and universities from Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana and Alaska.

Laura Trollan is “Miss Alaska”

Brown-eyed Laura Trollan, a communications major at Western, may never be “Miss America,” but don’t count on it.

The personable 19-year-old from Juneau already has bested 11 com­petitors in her bid for the national pageant’s top spot and is the first woman from her city since 1959 to wear the crown, “Miss Alaska.”

Since winning that title May 30, Trollan has been spending long hours with a coterie of coaches, preparing for the finals in Septem­ber and making numerous public appearances in Alaska. The effort already has paid off with a $4,000 scholarship and crystallized an earlier decision to seek a career in law.

Wisconsin-born Trollan lived for a number of years in Seattle, where she studied dance at the Cornish School. She says she plans to per­form a jazz ballet routine for the talent portion of the "Miss America" competition.

"You have to look your best all the time, and that’s hard," she ex­plained, smiling. “Before I arrived down here from Alaska recently, my hair was in great shape. Then we arrived at Seattle and the damp weather frizzled it.”

Meanwhile, she’s on a strict exercise, diet, poise and dance practice regimen.

“I run about three miles a day and there are a lot of exercises my coaches want me to do," she said. "Much of the physical training is to enable the contestants to build up stamina. When the final festivities begin, most of us will average only about three hours sleep a night.”

The poised Miss Alaska already has plans to attend Portland’s Willamette Law School, but her short-range goals are keeping her on the go.

“There’s a lot of pressure to make public appearances in Alaska, and representing the state to the best of my ability means lots of work. The glamour aspect of the pageant is secondary to the train­ing involved.”

Friendly and outgoing, Laura Trollan is conscious that, to date, no “Miss Alaska” has ever been crowned “Miss America.”

“I know there’s a feeling that girls from the bigger cities and more populous states have a better chance, but I don’t think that’s the case,” Trollan said, adding that she’s anxious to meet the national pageant’s emcee Ron Ely, a former Tarzan. “He’s a hunk.”

Trollan plans to leave for Atlantic City Sept. 1. The national telecast is set for Sept. 12.

“I’ll definitely be telling the audience that I’m a student from Western Washington University," she promised.
Grads get send off from ACE's Peltason

Today's college students may seem more career oriented than those portrayed in 1950s lighthearted Hollywood films or than the militant student activists of more than a decade ago, but society stands to gain much from their "competency and commitment.

That message was given to more than 1,100 graduates Friday, June 12, by Dr. Jack W. Peltason, speaker at the 82nd annual commencement of Western Washington University. Peltason, president of the American Council on Education, said learning to balance the competencies gained in higher education for personal goals with commitments for individual growth and social needs are among the major challenges of each graduate.

He reminded students that most of their working careers will be in the next century and that no one can accurately predict which skills will be most in demand then.

"Half of what they taught you [here] is wrong," he said. "The problem is, we don't know which half, and that will take you the rest of your lives to find out."

Peltason, recently named to the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, said his and previous generations have helped improve the societies they inherited, as will today's young men and women. He reminded the graduates that those who quietly have taken pains to prepare themselves for social contributions and developed commitments to their goals will probably make more constructive changes than those who merely protested or vocalized their concerns.

"Premature world-saving is fun, but it's not as effective. Be in for the long pull," Peltason said.

Robert Frazier, outstanding graduate from Western's Philosophy Department and student speaker at the ceremonies, told the audience that it is well to seek success—wealth, prestige and power—but achieving such things could be "hollow accomplishments if character is absent. He defined character as the ability to "do things, simple things with a good heart."

Peltason and Frazier were introduced by Western President Paul J. Olscamp, who told graduates that coping with life's successes and failures often is a matter of keeping events in proper perspective.

Cited for Western's annual Excellence in Teaching Awards were Dr. Marian Tonjes, associate professor in the School of Education, and Dr. Loren Webb, professor in the Department of Speech Pathology and Audiology.
Crew wins cup

Winning a first-ever district title in men's track, regaining the LaFromboise Cup in men's crew, taking a second straight district championship in golf and capturing a national title in women's track highlighted the spring sports season at Western Washington University.

The men's track squad won the NAIA District I crown for the first time in the 25-year history of the meet. Individual event winners included Bruce Cyra in the 3,000-meter steeplechase, Saul Kindris in the 1,500 meters, Keith Liedes led Western at nationals as he tied for 32nd in a field of 173. A victory in the LaFromboise Cup race, its eighth in the last ten years under head Coach Marv Harshman. "The difference between being an assistant and a head coach is making suggestions versus making decisions," Huston said. "It's time for me to start making decisions." Huston was the head coach at Clark Community College for three seasons (1966-69), directing the Penguins to the conference championship and a state tournament berth in each of those campaigns. His overall record there was 58-28.

A 1963 graduate of Western, Huston played under Randall his senior season. Two years later he returned to the Bellingham-based campus to complete his master's degree, while being the Viking assistant coach and leading the junior varsity team to a 15-5 mark. Huston, who completed course work on a doctorate degree in biomechanics while at Washington State, is a 1959 graduate of Camas High School.

One of three finalists for the position which had 45 applicants, Huston began his duties at Western on June 15.

Sets grid schedule

Five schools which were ranked among the top 20 nationally last year are on the 1981 Western football schedule announced by Director of Men's Athletics and head football Coach Boyd Long (12th year, 44-59-1). Opening against defending NAIA Division II national champion Pacific Lutheran University at Tacoma on Sept. 19 (7:30 p.m.), the Vikings also meet Linfield College, third in NAIA Division II, on Sept. 26 (7:30 p.m.); Oregon Tech, 20th in NAIA Division I, at Klamath Falls, Ore., on Oct. 17 (1 p.m.); Eastern Oregon State College, 11th in NAIA Division I, on Nov. 14 (1 p.m.); and Portland State University, tenth in NCAA Division I-AA, at Portland, Ore., on Nov. 21 (1 p.m.).

Both the Linfield and Eastern Oregon encounters are at home. Two other contests slated for Bellingham's Civic Stadium are Whitworth College on Oct. 10 (7:30 p.m.) and Southern Oregon State College on Oct. 24 (1 p.m.).

Completing Western's gridiron schedule are Willamette University at Salem, Ore., on Oct. 3 (1 p.m.); Western Oregon State College (formerly Oregon College of Education) at Monmouth, Ore., on Oct. 31 (1 p.m.); and Central Washington University at Ellensburg on Nov. 7 (1 p.m.).

Western President Paul Olscamp breaks into a grin following wheel-to-wheel competition with Jessica Black of the Associated Students Board of Directors during a wheelchair obstacle course event on Red Square. The event, held April 23, was sponsored by Western's Organization for Handicapped Students as part of Handicapped Awareness Weeks, April 18 to May 5. Difficult as it is to maneuver a wheelchair, obstacle course participants had the added burden of a can of water to be carried in their laps during runs.

Dr. Hiller wins Canadian grant

Dr. Harley Hiller of Western's Department of History has won a $1,860 grant from the Canadian government for six weeks' travel and study in Canada's Atlantic Provinces.

Awarded under a Faculty Enrichment Program, the grant enables selected faculty in U.S. colleges and universities to undertake study and research in Canada to help them devise new courses in Canadian studies.

Hiller, who began his research June 15, plans to introduce a course in "The Regions of Canada" next spring at Western.

Flora named

Dr. Charles "Jerry" Flora, former president of Western, has been named to the Assembly of the Council for Postsecondary Education. Flora, a biologist, is head of Western's Institute for Freshwater Studies and directs the Leona M. Sundquist Marine Laboratory at Shannon Point, near Anacortes.

Career workshop slated for fall

Seattle area alumni considering career changes or who want to obtain more satisfaction from their current position, will be offered a workshop on Career/Life Planning this fall.

Set for Thursday evenings from Oct. 29 through Dec. 3, the workshop will offer participants strategies for job and career changes. Topics will include skills assessment, values clarification, decision-making and effective search techniques.

Keith L. Guy, who was named interim director of Housing and Residence Life last July at Western, has been appointed director of University Residences. Guy, who holds bachelor and master degrees from Colorado State University, joined Western in 1989 as assistant director of Residence Hall Programs, becoming director in 1970. For his new position, he was selected from among four finalists who were interviewed on campus after a nationwide search.

Internationally known historian Henry Steele Commager visited the Western campus in May to deliver a talk entitled "Democracy in America 150 Years Later." Commager was a visiting faculty member at the University of Washington during the quarter.

A series of four large concrete cubes by American sculptor Donald Judd will be the newest addition to Western's outdoor sculpture collection. Each of the beige-colored cubes, measuring seven feet to a side, will be related to one another but not connected. A similar piece by Judd, pictured above, is currently on display at the Los Angeles County Museum. Western's Art Acquisitions Committee has selected a site on south campus for the work.
Memory Walk information sought

During 1912, a marble block was fitted into the walkway in front of Old Main, and Memory Walk was born. But we don't know when it was named Memory Walk, or the circumstances of its beginning. If anyone out there has information on the subject, Dr. Richard Peterson, Wilson Library archivist, would appreciate receiving it.

He can be reached by phoning (206) 676-3193, or by writing to Wilson Library Archives, Western Washington University, Bellingham, WA 98225.

Gail Cowan

Gail Cowan, a 73rd Western grad and a vocational home economics instructor at Tacoma's Alternatives for Individuals (A-I) High School, was presented the Washington State Home Economics Teacher of the Year award last spring.

Cowan was made in Vancouver during the annual meeting of the Washington Home Economics Association.

Roderic Painter

Journalism grad Roderic Painter has been named director of the board of the United Fishermen of Alaska (UFA). Since graduating in 1974, Painter has been editor of the UFA newspaper and subsequently worked as a consultant to the legislative council and the Alaska Seafood Marketing Institute.

Morris A. Miller

Col. Morris A. Miller, USMC, a 1954 graduate of Western, became a make-up artist for Estee Lauder while continuing to model and teach modeling.

Kathleen Rae Hawn

We are pleased to advise that 1975 grad Kathleen Rae Hawn is living in Edmonds and will have her first novel, titled Cross Cousins, going to press shortly. She also is working for the Washington Institute for Self Help (WISH) in Seattle, where she performs public relations duties.

WISH utilizes a self-help approach to dealing with personal problems, enabling individuals to effectively function without the services of professionals, Hawn reports.

Students named 'scholar-athletes'

Three Western student-athletes have been named NAIA District I scholar-athletes for the 1980-81 school year. They include Ron Eysart in baseball, Brent Golden in cross-country and Todd Wilson in wrestling.

Eysart, a sophomore from Bellevue (Newport High School), hit for a .415 average as an outfielder on the Viking baseball team, while maintaining a 3.17 (4.0 scale) grade point average.

Golden placed fourth at the district cross-country meet, earning all-district honors and participating in the NAIA national meet. The senior from Deming (Mount Baker High School) is majoring in biology and has a 3.35 GPA.

Wilson, a sophomore from Vancouver (Fort Vancouver High School), finished fourth at the combined district I and II wrestling meet. The 168-pounder, who had a 20-14-1 ledger, is majoring in leisure studies and has a 3.33 GPA.

Annette Hansen

If you see the name "Personal Style Management" popping up in the Puget Sound area, it should be associated with 1975 Western grad Annette Hansen. Her business is image consulting.

After graduating from Western, Hansen taught English at schools in the Puget Sound area and modeling at John Robert Powers in Seattle. She ended her public teaching career in 1976 and became a make-up artist for Este Lauder while continuing to model and teach modeling.
