Coverage of the #MeToo & Time’s Up Movement

By Stella Harvey - Journalism - Mass Media Ethics taught by Sheila Webb

Project

- Methodology: I performed a content analysis by counting the language used by MSNBC, the BBC and Fox News when they described behavior inflicted by perpetrators. I also looked at who was interviewed in each article and clip. My categories came from my data set.
- Research Domain: I examined all of the articles and clips about the #MeToo and Time’s Up movements by MSNBC, the BBC and Fox News from October 18, 2017, around the time the movements began, to February 28, 2018, when I officially began my audit. In examined 23 articles and clips from the BBC, 21 from MSNBC and 20 from Fox News.
- Research Questions: Do MSNBC, Fox News and BBC cover the #MeToo and Times Up Movement differently? What kind of language is used when describing the actions of people who perpetrate this inappropriate behavior? Do these sources use different language? Who is interviewed and quoted in each of these articles and clips?

Assignment

- The ethics audit assigned in JOUR 351, Mass Media Ethics, asks students to pick a subject or event and analyze the coverage by a credible news source. Based on the topic, students develop research questions to test through textual or content analysis and scholarly research. Students then analyze their findings, wrestle with ethical issues common in journalism and apply ethical theories to real world events. The purpose of the project is to familiarize students with how to find research connections to what they are doing and to expose them to the work being done by mass media scholars.
- I chose to look at the coverage of the #MeToo and Time’s Up Movement by two popular news sources in the United States, MSNBC and Fox News, and one international source, the BBC.

Findings

Figure 2.0 – The graph above shows the percentages of what terms were used in all articles and clips about the #MeToo and Time’s Up movement from MSNBC, Fox News and BBC between October 18 to February 28.

- In all of the coverage I examined, terminology regarding inappropriate behavior was used interchangeably. Here is a break down of the definitions of the most used terms.
- Sexual Harassment is a legal term that comes from Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 which prohibits employment discrimination on the basis of sex.
- Behavior deemed as “sexual harassment” is actually very specific, and restricted to the workplace, but I saw it used in a variety of ways.
- Sexual Assault is another legal term defined as “any type of sexual contact or behavior that occurs without the explicit consent of the recipient,” by the Justice Department. There must be physical contact to be considered assault.
- Sexual Misconduct is not a legal term, and is defined as unwelcome behavior of a sexual nature that is committed without consent or by force, intimidation, coercion, or manipulation.
- Behaviors that can be described as misconduct could also be illegal, depending on the state.

Discussion

Ethical Issues

Truth Telling

- To represent the truth in its entirety, it is essential for reporters to provide their audience with the full context of the story, which includes defining terms.
- While the reporters did not withhold the truth from these stories or lie, by leaving out the context, the audience is left to assume what they think these terms mean, making it even more complicated when reporters use these terms interchangeably.

Fairness

- Society of Professional Journalism encourages reporters to minimize harm, especially when reporting on sensitive subjects.
- While journalism has made this information more accessible and widespread, it is also important to use the correct terminology in order to treat all subjects fairly.

Media Credibility

- Using terms interchangeably and not explaining the full context does not reflect well on these news organizations, and could make them less credible and lead to backlash from their audience.

Ethical Theories

The Golden Mean

- I asks journalists to come to a moderate but ethical solution in situations where extreme choices are unacceptable.
- This theory was not met because each network had specific groups they leaned toward more when reporting on these movements.

The Categorical Imperative

- Asks reporters to tell the truth no matter the consequences.
- This theory was also not met, because while the reporters did not specifically withhold information or lie to their audience, using nuanced terms interchangeably and not providing adequate context did not portray the full story to their readership and viewers.

Utilitarianism

- Asks reporters to look at the consequences of their actions by asking who could benefit or be hurt by their decisions.
- Utilitarianism was not met. By using a variety of terms that have different social, political and legal meaning interchangeably, the general public, who is the greatest number, is failed because they are not being informed with the whole truth or context for these complicated discussions.

The Veil of Ignorance

- Asks journalists to report independently of sexual, political or economic factors that make us biased.
- The veil of ignorance was met in the reporting of all three of these news outlets because every party was treated the same, with fair and responsible judgement by the reporter.
