Assignment

- The ethics audit assigned in JOUR 351, Mass Media Ethics, asks students to pick a subject or event and analyze the coverage by a credible news source. Based on the topic, students develop research questions to test through textual or content analysis and scholarly research. Students then analyze their findings, wrestle with ethical issues common in journalism and apply ethical theories to real world events. The purpose of the project is to familiarize students with how to find research connections to what they are doing and to expose them to the work being done by mass media scholars.

- I chose to look at the coverage of the #MeToo and Time’s Up Movement by two popular news sources in the United States, MSNBC and Fox News, and one international source, the BBC.

Findings

- In all of the coverage I examined, terminology regarding inappropriate behavior was used interchangeably. Here is a breakdown of the definitions of the most used terms.

  - Sexual Harassment is a legal term that comes from Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 which prohibits employment discrimination on the basis of sex.
  - Behavior deemed as “sexual harassment” is actually very specific, and restricted to the workplace, but I saw it used in a variety of ways.
  - Sexual Assault is another legal term defined as “any type of sexual contact or behavior that occurs without the explicit consent of the recipient,” by the Justice Department. There must be physical contact to be considered assault.
  - Sexual Misconduct is not a legal term, and is defined as unwelcome behavior of a sexual nature that is committed without consent or by force, intimidation, coercion, or manipulation.
  - Behaviors that can be described as misconduct could also be illegal, depending on the state.
  - Sexual Abuse - I could not find one clear definition of “sexual abuse,” yet it was also used interchangeably with these other terms.

Discussion

- The Golden Mean asks journalists to come to a moderate and ethical solution in situations where extreme choices are unacceptable.
- This theory was not met because each network had specific groups they leaned toward more when reporting on these movements.
- The Categorical Imperative asks reporters to tell the truth no matter the consequence. This theory was also not met, because while the reporters did not specifically withhold information or lie to their audience, using nuanced terms interchangeably and not providing adequate context did not portray the full story to their readership and viewers.
- Utilitarianism asks reporters to look at the consequences of their actions by asking who could benefit or be hurt by their decisions.
- Utilitarianism was not met. By using a variety of terms that have different social, political and legal meaning interchangeably, the general public, who is the greatest number, is failed because they are not being informed with the whole truth or context for these complicated discussions.
- The Veil of Ignorance asks journalists to report independent of social, political or economic factors that make us biased.
- The veil of ignorance was met in the reporting of all three of these news outlets because every party was treated the same, with fair and responsible judgement by the reporter.

Examples

- “Actresses wore black gowns in support of the Time’s Up movement, standing in solidarity with victims of sexual assault and harassment,” (BBC).
- “The “Me Too” movement — which encourages women to identify themselves as victims of sexual harassment or assault — gained momentum after Weinstein’s case exploded,” (Fox News).

More Discussion

- MSNBC, Fox News and The BBC do cover the #MeToo and Time’s Up movement differently.
- It is the responsibility of journalists, especially networks like MSNBC, Fox News and the BBC who have a massive audience, to report on issues fairly and truthfully so individuals may engage with the world with a clearer understanding of events and issues that impact people around them.
- While these sources did not clearly exhibit any outright unethical behavior such as lying about a source, ignoring or covering up a conflict of interest, not using the correct terminology, and consistently using terms interchangeably will impact the way an audience views and interprets these events and movement, which can potentially be detrimental to these social movements and individuals.
- Newsrooms and reporters must do better at understanding the terms that are often used interchangeably in society in order to be an asset to the public.
