

2014

About the Authors

Follow this and additional works at: <https://cedar.wvu.edu/jec>

Part of the Education Commons

Recommended Citation

(2014) "About the Authors," Journal of Educational Controversy: Vol. 8 : No. 1 , Article 15.

Available at: <https://cedar.wvu.edu/jec/vol8/iss1/15>

This About the Authors is brought to you for free and open access by the Peer-reviewed Journals at Western CEDAR. It has been accepted for inclusion in Journal of Educational Controversy by an authorized editor of Western CEDAR. For more information, please contact westerncedar@wwu.edu.

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Curtis Acosta has been a high school teacher for nearly 20 years in Tucson, where he developed and taught Chicano/Latino Literature classes for the renowned Mexican American Studies program in the Tucson Unified School District. He is an award-winning educator that was recently named one of the Top 10 Latinos to Watch in US Politics by the Huffington Post. Curtis has also been featured in the documentary Precious Knowledge, The Daily Show with John Stewart, as well as multiple profiles by CNN, PBS, the New York Times, and the Los Angeles Times amongst many other media outlets. Curtis has also been fortunate to have articles published in the English Journal, Voices in Urban Education, and the book Educational Courage: Resisting the Ambush of Public Education. He is the founder of the Acosta Latino Learning Partnership; an educational consultation firm committed to help educators create empowering and engaging pedagogical practices in their own classrooms.

Richardson Addai-Mununkum is a Ph.D. student of the Department of Curriculum & Instruction, School of Education, University of Wisconsin – Madison. He is a graduate of University of Cape Coast, Ghana; from where he obtained his B.Ed. and MA degrees. His interest in education, society, socialization, and social order has informed his previous scholarly writings and presentations at international conferences. His research curiosity is in religious pluralism, religious education in public schools, education in Africa, and social studies curriculum development. He is currently designing a study on representation of religions in Ghanaian schools. Richardson believes educational research is very complex; and that collaboration in most cases yield far more impeccable results than single-handed ventures. To this end, he welcomes invitation for joint research projects. He can be reached at raddaimununkum@yahoo.com

Gerardo Aponte-Martinez is a doctoral student and instructor in the Department of Teacher Education at Michigan State University. His areas of interest include teachers' pedagogies for global perspectives across disciplines and the development of pedagogical reasoning in teacher candidates during preparation. Previously, he taught middle school social studies in Haines City, Florida.

Nathaniel Barr is a Master's student in the English Studies program at Western Washington University, where he works as a graduate assistant for the English Department and the Journal of Educational Controversy. His research interests include film, queer and postcolonial literature, and continental philosophy. He is completing his thesis on ideology, aesthetics, and gay life in the British public sphere under Thatcher through a reading of Alan Hollinghurst's The Line of Beauty.

Kerry Burch is an Associate Professor of Philosophy of Education at Northern Illinois University. His research interests are directed toward a synthesis of Socratic pedagogy, Critical Theory, American Pragmatism and democratic citizenship. He has published in Teachers College Record, Educational Studies, Studies in Philosophy and Education, and Philosophical Studies in Education. He has published two books, Eros as the Educational Principle of Democracy (Peter Lang, 2000) and Democratic Transformations: Eight Conflicts in the Negotiation of American Identity (Continuum, 2012).

John Covalleskie is Associate Professor of Educational Studies at the University of Oklahoma and Professor Emeritus from Northern Michigan University. His overlapping areas of interest are moral education and the morality of democratic life. He is the author of many articles related to moral education and development and a book, Membership and Moral Formation: Shame as an Educational and Social Emotion, from Information Age Publishing. His current work is on the First Amendment in schools and the special problems of democratic inclusion presented by specific religious traditions.

Scott Ellison is a Clinical Assistant Professor of Cultural Studies in Educational Foundations at the University of Tennessee. His research interests include global political economy, global trends in education policy and reform, and the cultural politics of public schooling and education policy. Email correspondence: bellison@utk.edu

Walter Feinberg is the Charles D. Hardie Emeritus Professor of philosophy of education, at the University of Illinois in Urbana. Feinberg has served as the Benton Resident Scholar at the University of Chicago and was appointed a Spencer Foundation Resident Faculty Fellow. He is also the author of a number of books and articles addressing the relationship between education and democracy, including Common Schools/Uncommon Identities, Yale University press and is co-editor Citizenship Education in Liberal Democratic Societies, Oxford University Press, 2002. His recent work is on the topic of religious education and democracy. For Goodness Sake: Religious Schools and Education for Democratic Citizenry, Routledge looks at this issue in the context of religious schools. His latest book (with Richard Layton) For the Civic Good: The Liberal Case for Teaching Religion in the Public Schools argues through case studies that religion courses can teach critical, reflective skills. Feinberg has served as President of the North American Philosophy of Education Association and the American Educational Studies Association. Feinberg has been a Keynote speaker at the British Philosophy of Education Society Oxford; he has delivered the Butts Lecture at AESA and the Dewey Lecture for The Dewey Society. He is the 2014 recipient of the Life Time Achievement Award by the John Dewey Society.

Celina Meza earned her Masters in Teaching from Western Washington University, where she worked as a graduate assistant for the Secondary Education Department, Writing Center, and the Journal of Educational Controversy. As a second generation Chicana and first generation college student, Meza is particularly interested in creating equitable and inclusive education experiences for historically disenfranchised youth. While at Western, Meza received the Multicultural Achievement Program Scholarship and the Center for Education, Equity, and Diversity award for her dedication to issues of social justice.

Peter J. Nelsen is an Associate Professor of Social & Philosophical Foundations of Education at Appalachian State University. He teaches courses on social justice and philosophy of education, and his current research is on the critical, emancipatory tradition within pragmatism. He is also the co-editor of the interdisciplinary education journal, Democracy & Education.

Ari Luis Palos has directed and shot a number of films including: The Beauty Salon, Mas Alla de la Frontera/Beyond the Border, Impresario, The Kentucky Theatre, El Rio de los Perros/The River of the Dogs, Al Garete/Adrift, Corazon del Plata/Heart of Silver, The Spirituals, and Precious Knowledge.

Anthony Pellegrino, PhD, a ten-year veteran high school social studies teacher, is currently assistant professor of history and social studies education in the College of Education and Human Development at George Mason University where he teaches methods of teaching history/social studies in the secondary school, foundations of secondary education and research on teacher education. He has published articles in journals including: Action in Teacher Education, The Journal of Social Studies Research and the International Journal of Multicultural Education on topics related to history/social studies education as well as the experiences of preservice educators.

John Richardson is an Emeritus faculty member in sociology at Western Washington University. He is associate editor of the Journal of Educational Controversy. His primary area of research and publication has been the history and institutional structure of special education. Along with numerous articles, his books include Common, Delinquent, and Special (1999) and Comparing Special Education (2011). His current research is a cross-national study of the convergence of special and vocational education, and the construction of a new educational category that draws on this overlap to sustain the global expansion of general education.

Boaz Tsabar is a high school teacher; he serves as head of education studies in the David Yellin College of Education and is a lecturer to Pedagogy and Philosophy of Education at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem.

Kathryn Ross Wayne is an associate professor in Woodring College of Education at Western Washington University. Her interdisciplinary interests focus primarily on issues associated with climate change and vulnerable populations but also include social justice and diversity concerns.

Kristien Zenkov, PhD, is an Associate Professor of Education in the College of Education and Human Development at George Mason University. He is the author and editor of more than one hundred articles and book chapters and five books, focusing on teacher education, literacy pedagogy and curricula, social justice education, and professional development schools. Dr. Zenkov is also the co-director of "Through Students' Eyes," a project based in Cleveland, northern Virginia, Haiti, Iraq, and Sierra Leone which asks youth to document with photographs and writing what they believe are the purposes of school. His areas of expertise include literacy education, teacher education in intensified settings, visual sociology and research methods, and social justice education.

Guoping Zhao, Ph.D., is an associate professor of philosophy of education and program coordinator of Social Foundations at Oklahoma State University. Her primary areas of scholarship are comparative philosophy, philosophy of education, and cross-cultural studies in education. She has presented papers at national and international conferences including AERA, PES, PESA, PESGB, AESA, and CIES and has published widely in refereed academic periodicals. Her work has appeared in Philosophy East & West, Journal of Chinese Philosophy, Educational Theory, Studies in Philosophy and Education, American Journal of Education, Culture & Psychology, Educational Studies, Intercultural Education, the Journal of Thought, and other journals.